

Relationship DYNAMICS

Ahhh, the dynamics of relationships that span through your home. Patty and Beth ask you, “Are we talking about your family?” Well, partly so. Actually, we are talking about the chair you have named, the bed you sleep on, the sofa with plastic still on the cushions(?) (no no no that would be — pause — the #davenport. We believe the most important relationships are, of course, family, but a close second to that relationship is, you guessed it, your furniture. Art is in the furnishings...more on that later.

Patty Artis and Beth Artis

At Artis, we know a lot about those relationships. Where the dysfunction starts and how to counsel through those sometimes daunting challenges. We can spot the “love at first sight” relationship versus the, “is it the right fit for me in the long run relationship?” Trust me, we marry the two.

This editorial is supposed to be about “women in business.” That said, I will tell you us Artis women have designed and built commercial and residential interiors for years with integrity, passion, and value. Moreover, did you know that 94 percent of the decisions made about the buying of home furnishings/art/products are from the women of the household? We ask you, why not come experience a business where the values are in check, our cell phone numbers are on our cards and where your relationship matters? And yes if you must, you can say “davenport.” We will tell you the history of that name and why that term is used. Come experience why we say “Art Is” in the furnishings.
